

HADDENHAM DURING THE CIVIL WAR

The document here printed is clearly written in a contemporary hand on all four pages of a double sheet of foolscap; it is and has always been in the possession of the Rose family, who have possessed Grenville's Manor in this parish since 1569; Edward, James, and Thomas Rose are named in the paper. The kindness of Mr. Walter Rose, one of our members, who is descended from the Edward named above, enables this interesting document to be published; some fifty years ago Robert Gibbs printed it without comment of any sort in the " Bucks Advertiser," but it is well worth preserving in a more accessible form, and the present transcription, which preserves the spelling of the original, has been made without reference to the former one. The editor ventured to submit it to our most distinguished living authority upon the Civil War period, and Sir Charles Firth, with the generosity which is often to be found in great scholars, has been good enough to supply comments which are embodied in the brief introduction and notes.

Our county already contains a good deal of material relating to this disturbed period, such as the history of the Newport Pagnell Garrison (which appeared in Vol. II. of the RECORDS) and in the " Verney Memoirs" (Vols. II. to IV.). It is felt that this paper, throwing light upon the financial burdens of a typical parish, will be a welcome addition to the material available for a study of the Civil War as it affected Bucks.

The financing of the Civil War was begun by the Parliament asking for voluntary subscriptions of horses, arms, plate, and money;¹ the Government promising- interest at 8 % p.a. on their value.² Those in London who had not made voluntary contributions by 29th November, 1642, were assessed and taxed up to 1-20th part of their estate.³ On 24th February, 1643, a general weekly tax was imposed on every county,⁴ and under this order Buckinghamshire was assessed at £420 per week, the committee for levying the tax being appointed.⁵ They form an astonishing list of Bucks Worthies, including, amongst others, not only John Hampden and Bulstrode Whitelocke, but also Sir Richard Ingoldsby, of Waldridge, a cousin of the Protector and of Hampden, who was not present at the trial, but signed the death-warrant, and, alone of all the regicides, was admitted to pardon at the Restoration. There were also Richard Grenville, of Wotton, Sheriff in 1641; Sir Peter Temple, of Stowe, who had been Sheriff in 1635, and was held to account by the King for his failing to collect the Ship-money from Hampden and others; Thomas Tyrrell, a Colonel in the Parliamentary Army, and afterwards made a Commissioner of the Great Seal by Cromwell, he is buried at Castlethorpe; Arthur Goodwin, M.P., and close friend and colleague of Hampden; and Richard Winwood, who founded the almshouses at Quainton, where he is buried.

The various sums mentioned in paragraphs marked "A" and "B" in the margin below refer to these voluntary levies. The "propositions" mentioned relate therefore to sums which were more in the nature of subscriptions to a war loan than of actual taxes; they bore interest and were repayable. The amounts set out under "C" are expressly taxes which were not recoverable.

The various types of disbursements recorded under "D" and subsequent paragraphs seem rather to be the foundation of claims against the Government, which might or might not be admitted. The names of the collectors of the monthly taxes are then given, and the final paragraphs, written by a different hand, seem to be mere memoranda.
